Residents who join the Toms River community solar program can expect significant financial benefits. By subscribing to community solar through Solstice, participants can enjoy savings of up to 21% on their electric bills. Furthermore, Solstice is offering a generous $50 enrollment bonus to individuals who join the program.

Their innovative model allows households to subscribe to a local solar farm without installations or upfront costs and see savings of approximately 10% on their electric bill. With over 2,000 customers, Solstice is bringing more affordable, clean energy for a greener future for all.

One of the only companies in the solar industry co-founded and led by women of color, Solstice has generated demand for 111 MW of clean energy across 25 community renewable projects in multiple states, with the total clean energy capacity from enrolled households, small businesses and nonprofits representing the environmental equivalent of not ...

New Jersey's newly sanctioned self-attestation method aligns with the standard set for community solar projects under the low-income communities bonus credit program. In addition, the pilot-approved methods of categorical eligibility and geo-qualification both still stand under the CSEP, with new programs (including Medicaid) added to the ...
