Bouvet Island (/ 'b u: v eI / BOO-vay; Norwegian: Bouvet&#248;ya [3] [bu'v&#232;:oeY?]) [4] is an uninhabited subantarctic volcanic island and dependency of Norway. It is a protected nature reserve, and situated in the South Atlantic Ocean at the southern end of the Mid-Atlantic Ridge, it is the world's most remote island.

The island was rediscovered in the early 19th century. It was so far away from Bouvet's reported position, though, that those who saw it thought it was a completely different island. It took a while to reconcile Bouvet's report with the others. Today, the island is owned by Norway, which maintains it as a nature reserve.
